Kitchen

White cabinetry, marble tile on the walls, and a mirrored wall opposite the windows make the kitchen appear more expansive. A handcrafted light fixture modeled after a cherry blossom branch hangs above a table where guests can sit and have appetizers or cocktails while dinner is being prepared.

White marble tile and a white soaking tub give the bath a cloudlike effect. A nature-inspired metallic sculpture and tall mirrors framed with a hint of blue reflect the light coming in through the windows. "The sculpture is like jewelry on the wall," says the designer.

Upper Sitting Room

In the light-filled sitting area on the second floor, Howard artfully injected '70s flair with glossy white walls evocative of patent leather. A custom table serves as a place for a puzzle, a late-night game of cards, or an afternoon cup of tea with a neighbor.

Boy's Room

A dark espresso hue envelops the boy's room, where twin beds are cleverly disguised as a sectional sofa. Black-and-white photographs of cultural and political icons, such as Andy Warhol, Jackie O, and Ray Charles, bring in a retro feel. "I always try to have at least one dark room in a house because it provides a more intimate feel," says Howard, who used a variety of techniques, such as the tone-on-tone wallcovering and a shag rug, to add interest to the monochromatic palette.

A roomy glassed-in shower makes the bath open and airy, while earth tones and a variety of textures add interest. A band of square, lattice-patterned tiles gives dimension to the wall of subway tile and echoes the pattern seen in the bedroom.
