

ATLANTAN
JAN / FEB 2010 / SRPIG

THE URBAN ELECTRIC CO.

The Sprig light fixture by Amanda Nisbet at The Urban Electric Co.

Let There Be Light

Its name may conjure up a boring utility company of yore, but The Urban Electric Company is hardly dull. In fact, it's long been a stylish secret source for designers-in-the-know. Now the Charleston-based company, which specializes in artisanal, custom lighting that combines both traditional flair and 21st-century innovation, is making a move to Atlanta. Its new 900-square-foot showroom at White Provision opens in Westside this January. Don't miss Urban Electric Company's bespoke collection of fixtures designed by some of today's top architectural and interior design talents, including Mark Maresca, Richard Mishaan, Darryl Carter and Amelia Handegan. From Federal-style lanterns and glam mirrored sconces to groovy contemporary chandeliers, each creation is bench-crafted by hand and can even be commissioned for your individual casa. Light me up! urbanelectricco.com.

"I love the new, colorful, contemporary floral designs from Missoni for Stark. I just used one for the lobby of Spanx's HQ."

DESIGNER JOHN OETGEN